Fantastic First Grade Scientists

First grade scientists have been busily observing guppies, pond snails, and water plants such as cabomba and chara! They used magnifying glasses to take a closer look at each organism and made sketches and notes in their lab books. First graders used their productive thinking talent to generate many, varied, and unusual property words when taking notes. The students learned the main body parts of a fish and labeled the tail, fins, eyes, and gills on a diagram of a guppy. They compared and contrasted the guppies to the pond snails and found great joy in feeding the guppies. They watched with excitement as the snails tried to escape from the aquarium on their one foot!
